EICHMANN TRIAL OF KILLER AND TORTURER OF MILLIONS HEARS PROSECUTOR PAY TRIBUTE TO PEOPLES OF EUROPE WHO HELPED JEWS WHEN HOLOCAUST FELL ON THEM: DANES, BELGIANS, SWEDES, NORWEGIANS, DUTCH, ITALIANS; POLISH, FRENCH AND LITHUANIAN UNDERGROUND, BULGARIANS

Israel closed its case against Adolf Eichmann, Nazi killer and torturer of millions of Jews, in the 115th session of the trial that began on April 11, Attorney General Gideon Hausner asked the court for a "just and truthful verdict," by which he clearly meant conviction on all fifteen counts of the indictment, says the New York Herald Tribune. The judgment will be delivered in late October or in November. In his summation, Mr. Hausner said:

"My request, your honors, is that you rule that Eichmann was involved in a conspiracy to commit crimes against the Jewish people and against humanity in all their stages, that he occupied a central position in this conspiracy in its executive stages, and that therefore he is responsible for all the consequences — for all the acts committed by himself and by others because of that conspiracy."

The effect of that statement would be to make Eichmann as responsible as those who committed the murders of the Jews in the death camps or those who gave the orders.

Mr. Hausner went further. He asked the court to rule that Eichmann acted mercilessly, with blood lust in his heart. He said to the tribunal:

"Adolf Eichmann acted for the perpetration of these crimes with which he is charged in the most extreme and merciless way, and the most brutal way conceivable. I would like the court to rule that he acted zealously, willingly, and lustfully to the very end."

The prosecution was not able under Israeli procedure to ask at this point in the case — that is, before the verdict by the tribunal — for the death penalty.

But it was clear to the spectators that Mr. Hausner was asking for a judgment of guilt of the most sweeping kind possible under the indictment, says the New York Herald Tribune. The crimes charged in the indictment — crimes against the Jews, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crimes of belonging to a hostile organization — are probably the most heinous in all history.

Eichmann looked unhappy. But he held his nerve, even though one could see by the continual twitches of his mouth and face that he must have been in a painful state of tension. As the prosecutor catalogued the Eichmann crimes, taking full advantage of the latitude allowed in this last phase of the trial for denouncing the accused man without mercy, Eichmann sat and listened.

His eyes, half closed, darted covertly to the prosecutor, to the judges, to the spectators. His mouth was tilted up, framed in the characteristic sneer. His expression was unpleasant in the extreme.

And the prosecutor, in asking for his verdict of doom, boasted of the retribution Eichmann, the Jew-hunter, faced in this court in Israel. In his most eloquent passage, as he concluded his long and massive case against the prisoner, Mr. Hausner told the tribunal:

"The fury rained down on the defenseless multitudes of the Jewish nation. They are gone. And they cannot be brought back to life. And in order to lament their death and their suffering, a new writer of the chronicle of lamentations has to come to lament that part of the nation which has been struck down.

"But there must be justice for what was perpetrated against them. I am proud of the fact that days have come in which a citizen of Israel can speak the language of justice to an evil-doer who was captured.

"Here in this state one does not speak to these evil men pleadingly and beggingly. One does not beg for their mercy, and one does not have to bribe them. One does not flee from them, and there is no need to flee frightfully from one country to the other. Here law and justice prevail.

"In the period of the returning of the exiles of Judea and Jerusalem, justice is being done here and the trial takes place here for the blood of the just that was spilled, as the prophet Joel had foretold.

"And again I ask you, oh judges of Israel, render a just and truthful verdict!"

The Attorney General did a thorough job of tying up the essentials of his case so as to prove all the various counts of the indictment, says the New York Herald Tribune. He gave a highly interesting glimpse of Eichmann as he sees the defendant, after having failed to break him on cross-examination.

"This is not a small man," he said, "not an insignificant cog in the great machine. This is a man of considerable intelligence. Of course he can't reason himself intelligently out of a network of incriminating evidence. He is bound to contradict himself from time to time. Therefore he must offer excuses which are baseless.

"But his stature and his intelligence, this we saw during the cross-examination, giving replies not to the point, producing excuses out of his sleeve cunningly and cleverly, thus revealing his nature and efficiency, his ability to find his whereabouts instantly. What he showed us of his wonderful memory, and the very essence of his appearance here, and the essence of what he said in the witness box, all show him as something very different from the little cog in the great machine."

The prosecutor made a major point of dealing with the torturing of the Jews, emphasizing the spiritual and bodily harm which the indictment charges was inflicted on the victims.

"Torture is not a smaller sin than murder," he asserted.

In dealing with the conspiratorial intent to exterminate the Jews, Mr. Hausner argued that in the first stage the intent was for partial extermination, and that later the intent crystallized into a desire to exterminate the Jewish people totally.

In touching on the count referring to sterilization, he said: "They wanted to efface the Jewish nations. No drop of Jewish blood would remain. He who is not to be killed because of being a Jew is sentenced to sterilization, so that he does not beget and so there should not be one man on earth who directly or indirectly stems from the Jewish nation."

The prosecutor called the court's attention to a movement among neo-Nazis in the world today to disseminate the propaganda that the charge that millions of Jews were exterminated is only Jewish propaganda, says Robert S. Bird, of the New York Herald Tribune.

"The Nazi movement tries to maintain that Jews were only killed in the same way as others, through bombings and starvation, and that all we want do is to deal in Jewish blood and to receive reparation money from Germany," he said.

The Israeli prosecutor paid eloquent tribute to those peoples of Europe who helped the Jews when the holocaust fell on them. Nation by nation, he called off the list — the Danes, the Belgians, the Norwegians, the Swedes, the people of the Netherlands, the Italians, the Polish underground, the French and their underground, and the underground in Lithuania.

Mr. Hausner began the final session of his pleadings with a review of the testimony given in West Germany by Eichmann's former Nazi cronies. He argued that though all of them were themselves war criminals, "good people did not sit in Nazi councils" and they at least knew what was going on in Eichmann world. Therefore their testimony was of value even if biased.

The prosecutor also emphasized the importance of two dead Nazis: Rudolf Hoess, former commandant of Auschwitz, and Dieter Wisliceny, Eichmann's deputy. Both incriminated the accused man and both, according to Mr. Hausner, admitted their own guilt in evidence they gave at Nuremberg. At that time they had resigned themselves to the hangings which became their fate, Mr. Hausner said.

In trying to show the greatness of Eichmann's reputation as a Jew-hunter, Mr. Hausner reminded the court of evidence in the record concerning the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem and his desire to obtain Eichmann's services after the war "so that Eichmann could help him in that country, help him to slaughter the Jews in Jaffa and Jerusalem."

The prosecutor added:

"Wherever they set foot, immediate death to Jews would follow. As soon as the Afrika Corps arrived in Northern Africa, immediately the persecutions of Tunisian Jews were ushered in."

The prosecutor carefully traced Eichmann's place in the Nazi table of organization, from the top down to the death camp murderers, says the New York Herald Tribune. He argued that the evidence showed this began with Hitler, passed through Goering to Himmler and then Heydrich, who "singled out Eichmann as his right hand man" for the implementing task.

His voice quavered with emotion when he cried that the Eichmann trial had fulfilled the Biblical prophecy of Joel, and that the Jews had at last brought one of their persecutors to book, says Homer Bigart, of the New York Times.

In Joel III, 6-8, it is prophesied that the Lord will raise the children of Judah out of bondage and deliver recompense to their persecutors. "I am proud," Mr. Hausner said, "that the time has come when a man of Israel can speak the language of the law to a tormentor."

"Here in this state one does not speak to these men pleadingly or beggingly," he declared. "One does not have to bribe a tormentor nor beg his mercy. There is no longer any need to flee from one doomed land to another."

Eichmann, in twenty-five days on the witness stand, had steadfastly denied that he was ever anything more than a transport officer in the Gestapo assigned to ship millions of Jews to concentration camps. He has denied that he ever killed anyone — Jew or non-Jew — or that he was even an anti-Semite.

But Mr. Hausner asked the three German-born judges to find that Eichmann had murdered with "fervor and insatiable lust." He urged the Israeli judges to note the "enthusiasm, mercilessness and extreme brutality" with which Eichmann allegedly hounded Jews in Nazi-occupied Europe and sent them to Auschwitz and other death camps.

This was not pertinent to the judgment, but to a "later phase of the trial," Mr. Hausner said, in an obvious attempt to head off defense pleas for mitigation.

He described Eichmann as not only unrepentant but even regretful that the conspiracy to exterminate European Jews had not been entirely successful, says the New York Times. He cited Eichmann's alleged interview with a Dutch journalist, Willem A. Sassen, in Buenos Aires four years ago, in which Eichmann said his only regret was that some Jews had escaped death.

"If Jews survived despite Eichmann's efforts," Mr. Hausner said, "it was due to the advance of the Soviet Army, which liberated the remaining Jews in the East and that of the Western allies from the other direction, which saved some thousands of Jews in concentration camps."

Mr. Hausner told the court: "To this day Eichmann does not believe he committed a crime. He did know his deeds violated all principles of morality, but he thought he was serving his Fuehrer, his country, and its destiny by ridding Europe of the Jews."

Mr. Hausner cited each of the fifteen counts of the indictment and claimed the prosecution had proved them all. During the early weeks of the trial there seemed to be a dearth of evidence to support one of the counts in the indictment. That count charged that Eichmann was involved in mass shootings of Jews by Einsatzgruppen, the Nazi special operational groups that slaughtered Jews, gypsies and Communist leaders in the East before the advent of the gas chambers.

But Eichmann himself had confessed that he had carried an order to Gen. Odilo Globocnik Einsatzgruppen commander, for the killing of 150,000 Jews. During his thirteen-hour summation Mr. Hausner linked Eichmann with Einsatzgruppen massacres by noting that Eichmann kept shipping Jews to areas in Poland where he knew the shootings were conducted.

Mr. Hausner conceded that the most incriminating testimony of Eichmann's role had been statements by his former Nazi accomplices, many of whom were hanged as war criminals, says the New York Times. But this evidence was not suspect, Mr. Hausner contended.

He argued that Rudolf Hoess, commandant of Auschwitz, and Dieter Wisliceny, an Eichmann aide, had made their statements in their death cells and could hope to gain nothing by shifting guilt to others. Both Hoess and Wisliceny had testified that Eichmann was zealous in rounding up Jews for death camps.

Moreover, Mr. Hausner said, hundreds of documents and Eichmann's own testimony corroborated the indictment. "It bothered Eichmann that Jews hid in obscure corners of Monaco," Mr. Hausner said. "It disturbed him that there was Jewish influence in Liechtenstein. The octopus tentacles of his office reached to every corner of Nazi-occupied Europe to trap a Jew and throw him into the gas chambers."

Mr. Hausner quoted from evidence of witnesses and from documents to support his contention of Eichmann's guilt with regard to the torture, enslavement and deportation of millions of Jews "in conditions liable to bring about their physical destruction."

Although no evidence was presented that Eichmann had ever enriched himself by one penny of Jewish property, he is charged with spoliation of the property of millions of Jews and this is listed in the indictment as a "crime against humanity" punishable by death.

Anticipating criticism that the law under which Eichmann is being tried might be considered overly harsh in this respect, Mr. Hausner pointed out that the confiscations and spoliations were carried out by "inhuman measures involving compulsion, theft, terrorism and torture."

Mr. Hausner said Eichmann hoped that with a German victory the murder of Jews would be extended to the rest of the world.

He recalled Wisliceny's testimony that Eichmann, in the twilight of the war, when the fall of Nazi Germany was imminent, told subordinates he would gladly jump into his grave with the knowledge that 5,000,000 Jews had perished.

Eichmann had testified that his statement was misquoted, that he had alluded not to Jews but to "enemies of the Reich," says the New York Times. Mr. Hausner found this implausible because the total number of those who perished fighting Nazism vastly exceeded 5,000,000. "The only enemy Eichmann ever fought was the Jews," Mr. Hausner declared.

Adolf Eichmann's plea that orders by his Nazi superiors inexorably bound him to ship Jews to death camps in World War II came under heavy fire in the prosecution's summation. Attorney General Gideon Hausner cited a painful episode in the history of the young Israeli nation to show that even if Eichmann were being tried by the regular criminal laws of Israel he could not employ the defense of superior orders.

Mr. Hausner referred to the 1956 massacre by an Israeli border patrol of forty-three Arab villagers. The patrol was enforcing a curfew on the Israeli-Jordanian frontier at a time when Israel was attacking Egypt. The Arabs had returned to their village, Kfar Kassem, unaware that the curfew had been imposed.

Several officers and men of the Israeli border police were later tried for murder. The accused pleaded that orders to shoot curfew breakers had come from higher echelons. The defendants said they had not acted according to their personal wishes.

Commodore Levy Chapel At U. S. Naval Station Honours Great Hero

BY CHAPLAIN SAMUEL SOBEL, U.S. NAVAL STATION, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

"Enter the main gate of the U.S. Naval Station at Norfolk, Va. Proceed one block on Maryland Avenue, the entrance boulevard, and your eye is immediately attracted to a complex of brick buildings, Frazier Hall, forming a U on your right. The left arm of the U is Protestant David Adams Memorial Chapel; the right arm is the Catholic Our Lady of Victory Chapel. Connecting the two is the Jewish Commodore Levy Chapel. Three chapels: Protestant, Catholic, Jewish — all under one roof."

These are the opening sentences of the just published historical monograph, "Uriah Phillips Levy, the Blue Star Commodore," on the forthcoming 100th anniversary of the death of one of the most colorful personalities in American Jewish history. It was fitting that on December 13, 1959, the Jewish chapel at the largest U.S. Naval Base in the world was officially named after Commodore Uriah P. Levy. The Protestant and Catholic chapels at the base, which had been opened two weeks after the attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941, were named and dedicated early in 1942. The Jewish chapel, which was opened for worship in February, 1943, remained without a name until the Navy decided to associate Levy's name with what is believed to be the first permanent synagogue under military auspices anywhere in the U.S.

Jewish sailors from the navies of the Free World putting in at Norfolk have in the Commodore Levy Chapel a beautiful and inspiring sanctuary for Jewish worship. Civilians and military personnel come to the Levy Chapel not only for worship but because they are proud of this monument to an American Jewish naval hero, a testimony to the cooperative spirit between the military and Jewish communities of the Tidewater area.

Here men of the U.S. Fleet join with their shipmates ashore for prayer, study, fellowship, and the making of friendships in an atmosphere reflecting the esteem for religion in the United States Navy. Because Norfolk is also the headquarters of the Supreme Allied Commander of the Atlantic NATO nations, ships of allied navies are informed of the Commodore Levy Chapel while en route to Norfolk. It is not unusual to find an international congregation following the American style of the universal Jewish liturgy, or joining in the Oneg Shabbat parties provided by the many local Jewish organizations united for service to the military under the program of the National Jewish Welfare Board.

Junior hostesses from the Norfolk and Portsmouth Jewish communities, and other young people's groups participate actively in the Chapel programs. Young cantors in Naval uniform lead in the services under the direction of the Jewish chaplain on duty with the U.S. Navy. Tape recordings of the services have been distributed to ships at sea and other far off places, thus further extending the influence and popularity of the chapel. The spirit of Uriah P. Levy is at home in this kind of atmosphere for he was a proud Jew who vigorously defended his religious beliefs and the rights of man as he pursued his career in the United States Navy.

Born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1792, Levy came from a distinguished Jewish family. His great-great-grandfather, Dr. Samuel Nunes, who escaped from the Inquisition in Portugal to England, joined the first boatload of Jewish colonists settled by Oglethorpe in Georgia in 1733. Levy's grandfather, Jonas Phillips, enlisted in the Philadelphia militia during the American Revolution.

Levy, who ran away to sea as a boy of ten, was the highest ranking officer in the U.S. Navy when the Civil War began. His career was full of exciting adventures. Once in Rio de Janeiro, after he had rescued a fellow-American who was being assaulted by some Brazilians, Levy was visited by Don Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, who offered the Jewish officer command of a new sixty-gun frigate in the Brazilian navy. Levy's reply to the Emperor had something of the quality of John Paul Jones' utterance, "I have not yet begun to fight"; or of Oliver Hazard Perry's memorable words, "I have met the enemy and they are ours." Said Levy to the Emperor: "I would rather serve in the American Navy as a cabin boy than as captain in any other service in the world."

Levy served his country and the U.S. Navy well. When the War of 1812 began, he was in command of the U.S.S. Argus. During the six-week mission in British waters, the Argus captured or sank 21 British vessels before Levy was caught and imprisoned in Dartmoor Prison, England. Later, at the risk of his career, Levy championed the abolition of the lash in the American Navy. Flogging had been justified on the ground that the Navy was manned by riff-raff and that only harsh punishment could keep them under discipline. Levy argued that no human being should be treated like a beast and he dedicated himself to the elimination of this degrading punishment. He lived to see America become the first nation to end the use of the cat-o'nine-tails in the Navy. After his death, his tombstone was inscribed: "Father of the law for abolition of the barbarous practice of corporal punishment in the Navy of the United States."

His keen sense of social justice made him a great admirer of Thomas Jefferson whose home at Monticello Levy bought when it was doomed to ruin by an eccentric who had acquired it from Jefferson's widow in order to raise silkworms there. It was Levy who saved this historic estate and led to its ultimate preservation as a national shrine. Levy also commissioned the Statue of Jefferson Signing the Declaration of Independence, and presented it to Congress as a gift from Virginia. It now stands in the rotunda of the Capitol in Washington.

Commodore Levy was a man of deep religious fervor. He belonged to two congregations: Shearith Israel, in New York, the oldest existing Jewish congregation in the United States; and later was a charter member of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, the first in the nation's capital city. To Shearith Israel he brought from Palestine a wagonload of earth from the Holy Land, for a traditional ritual which requires a small portion of the sacred soil to accompany the body into the grave, carrying it on one of the men-of-war he commanded. As the first president of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, he provided the leadership that won it a Congressional charter which affirmed for the first time the equality of the synagogue with the church in Washington.

When anti-Semitic insinuations were made during a court martial, Levy proudly testified, "My parents were Israelites and I was nurtured in the faith of my ancestors. In deciding to adhere to it, I have but exercised a right, guaranteed to one by the constitution of my native state, and of the United States, a right given to all men by their Maker, a right more precious to each of us than life itself. But, with claiming and exercising this freedom of conscience for myself, I have never failed to acknowledge and respect the like freedom in others. I might safely defy the citation of a single act, in the whole course of my official career, injurious to the religious rights of any other person."

When the Tidewater Jewish communities learned that the commanding officer of the Naval Station, Capt. Frederick H. Wahlig, intended to remodel the Jewish Chapel and name it for so distinguished an officer who symbolized Judaism at its best, David Zwerdling, USO-JWB area worker, undertook to marshall community support for the history-making event. The Norfolk Jewish Community Council and the JWB Armed Services Committees of Norfolk and Portsmouth joined forces under the chairmanship of Mrs. Ben Paul Snyder, whose generosity and hospitality to service personnel are legendary for the rededication and naming of the chapel.

The Chief of Navy Chaplains, Rear Admiral George A. Rosso, described the chapel as the embodiment "of a great tradition, freedom of religion for the individual and for the community in which he lives," and hailed Commodore Levy as "a dominant person in the formative years of our nation."

The Commodore Levy Chapel is a proud sight. The stained glass windows contributed by the Norfolk Jewish community are majestic. The Chapel has a beautiful, recessed ark; a pair of handsome candelabra, a gift from Portsmouth's Congregation Gemiley Chesed; a magnificent Eternal Light provided by the Snyders; a complete sound reproducing system; and permanent pews, with an original design of a ship's helm and the Ten Commandments, called "The Mariners' Tablets", carved into the pews' ends and other furniture.

Because of the many inquiries about the chapel received from individuals and organizations throughout the world, the Norfolk Jewish Community Council has published an illustrated book describing Commodore Levy's career and recording the relationship between the military and civilian communities in the Tidewater area since before World War I. The volume is edited by Dr. Malcolm H. Stern, rabbi of Norfolk's Ohef Sholom Temple, who is a noted historian and the genealogist of the American Jewish Archives.

When the 100th yahrzeit of Commodore Uriah Phillips Levy is commemorated on March 22, 1962, the spirit of the restless child who ran away from home at the age of ten will come to rest forever in a house of worship bearing his name, Commodore Levy Chapel. Not many people are afforded such a tribute by a grateful nation.

EICHMANN TRIAL OF KILLER HEARS PROSECUTOR PAY TRIBUTE TO MILLIONS

the Eichmann trial gave judgments in the Kfar Kassem case.

Judge Benyamin Halevi convicted the men on the ground that the orders they had received were "manifestly unlawful." Judge Halevi observed that the unlawfulness of the orders was much as "strikes any eye and makes the heart resentful, provided that the eye is not closed to see and the heart is not closed or vicious."

Justice Moshe Landau, the presiding judge of the Eichmann tribunal, presided over the Kfar Kassem appeal. He upheld the conviction. "A soldier, too, must have a conscience," he said then, says the New York Times. Eichmann, a former lieutenant colonel in the Gestapo (secret police), is being tried under a special 1950 law for punishment of the Nazis. The law specifically rules out the defense of superior orders, except as ground for mitigation. The retroactive law is untested.

What the Attorney General sought was to prove that the Nazi orders were so monstrous that they could not conceivably be employed as a defense by Eichmann even if the usual criminal laws were applicable.

Mr. Hausner also cited precedents from the judgments of the Nuremberg war crimes trials and precedents in Britain, the United States, and West Germany to support his contention that superior orders constituted no defense for criminal acts.

He said Eichmann had had ample time to weigh the legality of the Nazi plot to exterminate Jews. A moral choice was possible, he said. Turning to the glass cage where Eichmann sat, pallid and tense, Mr. Hausner cried: "Can there be any doubt that Eichmann knew he was engaged in a gigantic crime?"

Eichmann not only knew what he was doing but took cruel delight in sending Jews to gas chambers, Mr. Hausner asserted. He described the prisoner as "more extreme than the wicked Hitler himself."

The Attorney General cited Eichmann's actions in Hungary, where Eichmann allegedly supervised the deportation of 500,000 Jews to extermination camps in Poland, says the New York Times. He said Eichmann, in Hungary, had exceeded orders in combing the country for Jews and finally sending the remaining Jews in Budapest on an infamous "death march" to the Austrian frontier when transportation broke down.

Eichmann loved his work, Mr. Hausner insisted, and his conduct in Hungary refuted the defense contention that he was an unwilling tool of his superiors.

"He acted like a man who is neck-deep in his treacherous work and imbued heart and soul in his mission," Mr. Hausner declared.

Mr. Hausner ridiculed Eichmann's claim of forgery with regard to a letter urging a more stringent ban by the German Foreign Ministry on the emigration of Jews to Palestine. Mr. Hausner said:

"This claim reflects again his absurd last resort when faced with damning documents. Yet this document was found among the records of the Reich Foreign Office. There was no objection to its authenticity when it was submitted."

Hitler himself was prepared to make a deal to allow the emigration to Palestine of 8,750 Hungarian Jewish families on condition that all other Hungarian Jews be delivered to the Germans, Mr. Hausner said. But Eichmann was unwilling to let even this handful of Jews escape, the prosecutor contended.

Mr. Hausner said Eichmann appealed to Heinrich Himmler, head of the S.S. (élite guard), against Hitler's decision. As a result, the Attorney General said, Himmler intervened and demanded that the Foreign Office block such emigration.

"This was a clear demonstration of an attitude more extreme than that of the evil Fuehrer himself," Mr. Hausner declared, says the New York Times. He assailed Eichmann's explanation that Hitler's order was conveyed only orally to him through the Nazi plenipotentiary in Budapest, whereas Himmler's order to prevent any Jewish emigration was in writing.

"But Hitler's first order to kill all the Jews was conveyed to him orally," Mr. Hausner shouted.

Eichmann, in his testimony, had said that Reinhardt Heydrich, chief of the security police, told him in the summer of 1941 of Hitler's decision to annihilate all Jews in Europe.

Mr. Hausner added: "When it was a matter of extermination, an oral order was sufficient. But when the Fuehrer gave orders to save a handful of Jews he is not satisfied with an oral order and wants it in writing."

Synagogue of Guelph, Ont., has a new leader, Reverend Harold Lerner, who led the Stockport community congregation in Manchester, England. His application for the position was supported by the leading Jewish citizen and "grand old man" of his home town of Liverpool, Bertram Baron Benas, C.B.E.; J.P.; B.A.; L.L.M., barrister-at-law, bencher of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple, in London. He was the first president of the Merseyside Jewish Representative Council; chairman of the Council of Christians and Jews, former president of the Historical Society of England; and lecturer in the Law Faculty of the University of Liverpool. Reverend Lerner is the son of the late Reverend Simon Lerner, who served the Great Synagogue, in Liverpool, from 1920 to 1955. After serving as assistant minister at great Synagogue he was appointed Minister of the Bristol Hebrew Congregation in 1950, and inducted into office by the Chief Rabbi of Great Britain and the Commonwealth. He was officiating chaplain to Her Majesty's Forces; prisons; the United hospitals; the British Legion; and the airport, and was editor of the Bristol Jewish Recorder. In 1955 he went to Norwich Congregation, and was appointed an auxiliary chaplain to the United States Air Force in Europe, serving bases throughout East Anglia and Southern Germany. Reverend Lerner conducted services for congregations of nearly one thousand people, composed of servicemen and their families at retreats held in Hitler's hotel at Berchtesgaden, in the hall where visiting diplomats were entertained; reciting grace at tables where Goering and his ace Luftwaffe pilots sang hymns of hate; and performed a wedding ceremony in Hitler's study. He was chosen to represent the clergy of all denominations on opening day of the Royal Norfolk Show, to meet her Majesty the Queen and Prince Philip, with other members of the Royal Family. In 1959 a Manchester congregation called him to be religious leader. He is interested in sports and photography, and his work has been accepted often for exhibition. Reverend Lerner is married to the former Miss Toby Miller, daughter of Mrs. Betty Miller, of Liverpool, England, and the late Benjamin Miller, and they have an infant daughter, Eve Beverley.

Israel Relives The Holocaust

BY MOSHE BAR-NATAN, ISRAELI CORRESPONDENT OF THE JEWISH FRONTIER

Since the middle of April, when the Eichmann trial opened in Jerusalem, the people of Israel have been going through a profound and shattering experience. It is too early yet to say definitely what the effect will be, and indeed it would require a thoroughgoing psychological survey on a large scale to evaluate it, but there can be no doubt that it will be far-reaching. I doubt whether even Ben-Gurion with his penetrating insight could have foreseen in advance how deeply the trial would affect old and young, veterans and newcomers.

It happened that a few days after the proceedings had started — when there had been time for no more than the preliminary objections of the defense counsel to the jurisdiction of the Court and the Attorney General's reply — the previously fixed date of the Memorial Day for the Victims of the Holocaust came round. Solemn ceremonies were held, attended by the President and the leading figures of the State. There were moving addresses and, of course, the trial was uppermost in everyone's mind. But it was only when the Court proceedings eventually began that we realized how little speeches mean.

First came the opening address of the Attorney General, Mr. Gideon Hausner, which took ten hours, three full sittings of the Court, to deliver. Mr. Hausner is a highly competent lawyer, but he is not a mob-rousing orator. He is something better: a man of deep sincerity, who approached his appalling task in a mood of humility and devotion. As he said at the beginning of his address, he regarded it as his mission to speak for the six million prosecutors who could not stand up to point an accusing finger at the man in the dock. He allowed the terrible facts to speak for themselves, marshaling them logically, relentlessly, without tricks of rhetoric or attempts to put his own personality in the forefront of the picture.

The result was overwhelming. At intervals during the long day and a half that the speech took to deliver, I watched cynical, hard-boiled journalists in the crowded pressroom, listening with fascinated concentration to the dreadful tale. Kol Israel broadcast the entire address, and wherever you went you could hear the Attorney General's voice echoing from the loud speakers, in homes and cafés, as the multitudes outside the courtroom listened.

For the adults it was a resuscitation of things they had known but had forgotten or pushed to the back of their minds. For the youth, it was a revelation. Children listened in schools or in their parents' homes; soldiers listened through transistor radios in army posts and camps. Jews from the Oriental countries, who had known little or nothing of the fate of European Jewry, began to realise — many of them for the first time — what the Ashkenazim had gone through.

After the opening address for the prosecution came a merciful interlude. Independence Day saw the people of Israel, apparently forgetful of the grim past, celebrating the thirteenth anniversary of the establishment of the Jewish State, which was founded so that Jews should never again be led like sheep to the slaughter. The young people danced in the streets; their elders looked on with a smile on their lips but tears in their eyes. On the day of the parade they watched the march of their sons and brothers, strong, bronzed, and confident, and the tanks and guns which are dedicated to the defense of Israel against the enemies all around who openly threaten to finish Hitler's work.

One of the revelations of this trial is that the Mufti of Jerusalem, who incited Arab mobs to kill the Jews during the Mandatory period, and had close relations with the Nazis during the war, asked Himmler to appoint a Gestapo expert to march into Palestine with him at the head of — he hoped — his victorious troops, and guide him in "solving the Jewish question" by the methods of Auschwitz and Treblinka. It was not in a spirit of militarism that the people of Israel watched their army on parade, but in the determination that if any test should come they would not again have to watch impotently the murder of their families while the world stood by. One remark which I heard must have been echoed repeatedly up and down the land: "Eichmann should come and watch this." That was the Jewish idea of revenge!

But the trial had only begun. Next came an interlude of macabre drama: the voice of Eichmann himself was heard in Court, echoing eerily as passages from his statement to the police were played on the tape-recorder. During the ten months in which he had been in custody, he had been patiently interrogated by Chief Inspector Less of the Israel Police. The interrogation had been recorded, and the transcript gone over by Eichmann himself and initialed on every page. Seventy-six reels of tape and three thousand five hundred pages of transcript were submitted to the Court, and copies in six large volumes, distributed to the press.

The hand of Eichmann the bureaucrat was obvious on every page. Not a single typing error escaped his eagle eye; every minute alteration was meticulously initialed in the margin. In the same meticulous way he must have initialed hundreds of matter-of-fact reports from his subordinates that told a mounting tale of spoliage and murder.

Eichmann in captivity is revealed in these pages as a miserable figure: verbose, evasive, obsequious. He hated violence, he argues; he was sent by his superiors on several occasions to report what was happening in the extermination centers but could not bear the sight. He had to obey orders; absolute obedience was the law of a Nazi's life — if he had been told that his own father was a traitor, he would have put him to death. At the same time, he insists, he had never acted on his own initiative; he had never been more than a passive cog in the bureaucratic machine. All that was missing was the protestation that some of his best friends were Jews.

The documents tell a very different story: they show him enjoying a status far above his nominal rank in the Nazi hierarchy, putting pressure on the rulers of the satellite countries to kill more Jews, keeping his fingers on all the threads, relentlessly refusing to allow even a few individuals to escape the net, persevering in his deadly task with zeal and devotion even after, towards the close of the war, Himmler himself had begun to make a show of relenting.

The presentation of these documents forms a dry, subdued accompaniment to the more dramatic passages of the trial. They form the subject of abstruse, finicky little debates between the prosecution and the defense. What is the exact significance of this heading on the stationery and that title below the signature? Through what channels must a particular report have passed? And so on and so forth.

Grave, softspoken, the judges keep the proceedings on the rails, as if this were a commercial case between two ordinary litigants. It is at such times that the accused in his bullet-proof glass box sits up and takes interest, riffles through his papers, scribbles notes to his counsel.

But the flesh and blood of this trial is the witnesses as they take their places in a seemingly endless train: the saved remnant, the one in a city and two in a province who remained alive by some almost miraculous chance to stand up facing the murderous bureaucrat in the dock and tell their appalling stories. What a cross-section of European Jewry!

The white-bearded father of Herschel Grynspan, the tragic boy who shot Von Rath and unwittingly provided the Nazis with the excuse for the Kristallnacht pogrom; Benno Cohn and Aaron Lindenstrauss, leaders of German Zionism, typical of that cultured and polished Jewry; Leon Wells (formerly Welicki), then of Lwow and now of New Jersey, U.S.A., who recalls so vividly, as he tells his tale in Court, that thin, large-eyed, sixteen-year-old Jewish boy of two decades ago, who remained alive because he was compelled to disinter and burn the bodies of thousands of the victims to cover up the traces; Frieda Manis, the nurse from Sosnovitz, who watched helplessly as the hospitals were emptied to make up the quota of corpses fixed by Eichmann in his interdepartmental minutes; Zivia Lubetkin and Yitzhak Zuckerman, leaders of the Warsaw Ghetto revolt, and Abba Kovner, their confrere from Vilna.

Day by day they follow one another on the stand, living over again their ghastly experiences, telling of every possible variation of deliberate and sadistic brutality, till one wonders how one can bear to listen, how they can bear to tell, how men and women could have undergone all this and then returned to the daily business of earning a living, cooking and mending, bringing up children, and — greatest riddle of all — how the man in the dock can sit there impassively, fiddling with his papers, listening with a somewhat quizzical air, and arousing himself to a show of interest only when some bureaucratic detail demands his attention.

The audience in the courtroom and the larger audience who hear the nightly extracts on the radio may have read the story at one time or another during the past fifteen years in books or newspapers, but the living witnesses, even if it is only their voices that are heard through thousands of radios, unite them in grief for the prolonged suffering and misery and the loss of their six million brothers and sisters as nothing else could have done.

I have met some people who refuse to go through it all again, who will not read the story in the papers or listen to it on the radio, but they are in the minority. I feel sure that nothing that has happened in Israel since its establishment has done so much to produce a feeling of profound unity among its people.

The young sabras (native-born Israelis) now begin to realize what their fathers and mothers went through; they hear for the first time the explanation of the tormenting riddle: why did they go like sheep to the slaughter? Why did they not rise against their murderers? The Jews from Morocco and Tunis, Iraq and Yemen, now begin to understand that the Ashkenazim are not only the people who were here before them and have grabbed the best jobs and the best houses but the remnants of those who have passed through the valley of the shadow of death.

Many of the forebodings as to the effects of the trial have proved to be unfounded. On the whole, the public has stood the test. One man, moved beyond endurance, lost control of himself in Court. He was immediately and efficiently removed by the police, and allowed to return when he had come to himself — I like to believe that this shows that even our tough sabra policemen have Jewish hearts. There has been no hysteria, either in the streets or in the press. One feels that even the witnesses will be the better for the effort after they have "cleansed the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff which weighs upon the heart."

The prosecution has kept to the point. The painful question of those Jews who found themselves in leading positions in the community and had to negotiate with the Nazis has not been raised: "this is not the trial of the victims but the trial of the destroyer," as the Attorney General has said. Nor has attention been diverted by any attempt to settle historical accounts with the nations of the world who stood by and made no direct efforts to save European Jewry.

This trial has two objects: to bring home to the world and — no less — to the Jews themselves, inside and outside Israel, what the Nazis did to the Jewish people; and to prove the responsibility of Adolf Eichmann for these crimes. Nothing is being allowed to distract attention from those aims.

The Attorney General recalled Eichmann's proposal to exchange 1,000,000 Jews for 10,000 army trucks in 1944 and said the deal was conceived by Himmler. Mr. Hausner said Eichmann expected the deal to fall through and was "delighted" when Joel Brand, a Hungarian Jew, failed to return from a Middle East rendezvous at which he told Zionist leaders of the offer.

In fact, Mr. Hausner went on, Eichmann "was willing to contribute to the failure of the deal and ordered the further speeding up of Jewish deportations to 12,000 daily to Auschwitz.

Mr. Hausner read incriminating passages from the memoirs Eichmann allegedly dictated to a Dutch journalist, Willem A. Sassen, in Buenos Aires five years ago. One excerpt referred to Eichmann's feeling toward the Jews-for-trucks offer, says the New York Times. It read:

"My heart was never with the opponent. I prefer a dead opponent to a live one. But when I have orders from the Reichsfuehrer to mechanize the Twenty-second and Eighth Divisions with 10,000 trucks, then let 1,000,000 Jews go to hell.

"I never asked my heart. I asked Germany. In times of emergency we would have given 2,000,000 Jews for 10,000 trucks."
